Bodl. d. 212–6 presents a vocal text for the phrase 'Blow up the trumpet in the new moon' which differs from all other versions yet discovered. Musically it is preferable to the ordinary version, and more characteristic of Byrd. But it has been relegated to an appendix, with some reluctance, on account of the preponderance of evidence in favour of the better known, but not therefore better version.

The word 'joyfully' is underlaid differently in different texts. That of the York MSS. has been adopted in preference to that of the Durham MSS. (  ). Barnard, as usual, is indefinite. Nowhere is  found.
